Spring 397

Stilicho again marched east with strong forces. He was to assist the emperor Arcadius against the Huns and against Alaric.

He landed in the Peloponnese on southern coast of Gulf of Corinth & began to outmaneuver the Goths; on the Plateau of PHOLOË in ELLS he was able to encircle the Goths who began to suffer from lack of water, from hunger, and from epidemics. For the third

In 397 Stilicho was declared a public enemy of the Eastern Empire

Alaric waited until Stilicho left, then broke the agreements and crossed into Epirus. There he wrought such havoc that he forced the imperial government to come to terms with him.

The emperor had defined the authority of the praetorian prefect for precisely those administrative functions that were handed over to Alaric a few weeks later.

The Romans conceded to Alaric his claim to exercise civil and military authority inside the empire and to take the place of an Augustus.

Aradius and Alaric entered with a FOEDUS which allowed the Goths to settle in EMATHIA TELLUS, the central Macedonian heartland between the HALIACMON and AXIUS rivers. Purpose was to ^①integrate Alaric into the Roman hierarchy ^②imperial authorities wanted to designate the Roman territory that was to support the Goths. Alaric conducted the civil administration in the region.
